ACCEPTING OTHERS

There's more than one way to live one's life

This is in response to Cheri Ofner's letter, "Heterosexual unions one of country's absolutes," in the May 2 Gazette.

I can hardly believe the world in which we live today. It seems to me that we have become so used to our idea of normal that we forget about different people and different cultures.

Everyone has the right to be who or what they want and no one has the right to try and deny anybody their right to pursue happiness. It seems that we are venturing away from our foundation as a country simply because we are too scared to accept anything outside of our tunnel vision. What a sad world we've become when we refuse people their basic rights just because of our misguided fear.

I cannot speak for the Lord and I don't think anybody else should either. He made us all, he must have some idea of what he is doing.
